About the Program: Warranty analysis is offered in many software packages, and often the focus is on the analysis of a simple set of data. By contrast, this talk presents a case study of how such an analysis was conducted for a real problem. Join the speaker on this journey, with its numerous twists and turns.

About the Speaker: Joe chairs the Graduate Statistics Program in the John D. Hromi Center for Quality and Applied Statistics, Kate Gleason College of Engineering at Rochester Institute of Technology. In addition to teaching graduate students in the Applied Statistic program, he consults for a wide range of clients. His focus ranges from explaining fundamental statistical methods and mentoring Six-Sigma-project teams, to teaching advanced techniques and developing novel methods to solve complex client-specific problems.
